Realism meets surrealism in the intense and striking female portraits of Marco Grassi. His work brings together elements of pure decoration with unexpected and bright colour combinations and lacquering, which has led some commentators to label him as a pop artist. However, Marco has never allowed his works to become objects of fashion with only a fleeting relevance to time and place.

Rather, each highly personal image is created as a tribute to the particular identity of his subject in the specific moment in which she is painted. Every face he paints has a bright and inquiring look which reflects his own curiosity about the world, and with each portrait he seeks to captivate the viewer by creating a profound but silent dialogue between them and the woman in the painting.

After visiting Russia to study the traditions of Byzantine religious art, Marco began exploring the use of gold leaf which gives a distinctive warmth, colour and atmosphere to backgrounds and halos. In Marco's work the women may have baseball caps rather than halos of course, but he was captivated by the effect and it has now become a key element in the distinctive character of each piece.
